Background In our everyday life, banking plays a vital role. We pay or borrow from banks using, credit or debit cards and online banking, which help us meet our everyday economic needs. The main part of our support today is to offer their customers a landing facility. Because the bank provides its customers with credit facilities, they ensure their return. The studies carried out in the near past have been on a larger scale, in terms of results and scope. But the current work is looking for certain microscopic effect in the proposed study, which contribute to the bad credit. Age, sex, marital status and education, for instance. Maria et, al., (2007) conduct a study and according to the research, the impact of gender and age in the importance due to several factors in the decision process. This study shows that the decision- making processes of participants in this study are significantly different in sex and age. Women know more and their emotions are important to them in the decision- making process because of the constraints placed by the setting and closeness. As regards age, post- hoc comparisons show that young people have been significantly affected in their decisions by emotional and social issues, while adults and tired people are not so much affected. (Maria et., al.,, 2007). Lyons (2018) Illinois, USA, wrote a book and according to that, research shows that college students are more likely to risk mis-managing and misuse of credit in their credit card practice and identifies specific groups of students. Further trends indicate that the student assistance has not maintained pace with the increase in university costs (College Board, 2005b). More and more students are using higher-cost alternative to fund their education with increasing cost and financial support schemes short of those costs (College Board 2005b; Lyons, 2007a; Education Resources Institute, 1998). Especially when interest rates for such loans are in line with other university options, private
